One of the remarkable features of her associations with Mrs. James was that she freely discussed the penitentiary, and life within the institution She spoke of the kind of food they had, the manner in which it was served, and many other subjects of such an intimate character that only a prisone

Agent for Publishers.

Miss Caspari came to Washington about two years ago. She first lived at the Woman's Christian Home, 1719 Thirteenth street northwest. To the other persons living in the home she represented that she was the Washington agent for a large New York publishing firm, who manufactured rare de luxe editions of famous authors. She had no money apparently while she lived there and it is said that she often went for days without food.

Later the "publishing" business began to declare dividends and Miss Caspari bought new clothes. Then she moved to the home of a Mrs. Northern moved to the nome of a Mrs. Northern, 1623 Thirteenth street northwest, and in May she went to live with Miss Gem-

It was through Miss Gemmill that the arrest was made. She reported at headquarters how Miss Caspari had obtained $900 from her, and when the story was repeated in the District Attorney's office, it was decided to issue a warrant charging Miss Caspari with grand like irging Miss Casparl with grand lar-

Miss Gemmill gave her $200. After that she gave her various sums until the amount reached $350.

For the last wee kor two Miss Gemmill made a determined effort to recover some of the money she supposed had been invested with the book concern, she says. Miss Caspari told her there was $1,200 due her and that she expected the check almost any day. Yesterday morning she gave Miss Gemmill a check for $1,200 on the Lincoh National Bank. Miss Gemmill took the check to the bank and was informed that Miss Caspari had no account there.

A few minutes later Miss Gemmill met Miss Caspari on the street. Asked why she had given her a worthless check,
Miss Caspari is said to have explained that it was necessary for her to accompany Miss Gemmill to the bank before they would pay over the money.
Determined to force a settlement,
Miss Gemmill consulted her attorney, Llewellyn Jordan, who is employed at the Treasury Department. Mr. Jordan advised her to lay the case before the police.

Miss Caspari Arrested.

Learning that Miss Caspari had an appointment with Dr. Jordan at 2 o'clock, Detective Baur went to the Treasury Department, Dr. Jordan and the detective had a long talk with the an before informing her that she oder arrest. Asked what she had with the money, she asserted that it had been invested with the book owing that it had been forwarded to ew York. She said she could not pro-tee the receipts as they had been sent t of the city.

Worked "Ouick Touch" Trick.

Mrs. M. E. James, who conducts a small store at 1738 Fourteenth street, told the detectives a pathetic story of how Miss Caspari had managed to get $200 from her. The money represented the savings of years. Coming into the store one day, Miss Caspari told Mrs. James that she needed $4. She said she was in urgent need of the money and must have it immediately. After some deliberation, Mrs. James gave her $4. She paid the money back the following day.

A few days later, she rushed into the store and demanded $25. She explained to Mrs. James that she had an opportunity to make $50 in a few hours if she could only get $55. ## Gave Her $2,525.

The person from whom Miss Caspari obtained the most money was Mrs. Thomas H. Robbins. At various intervals Mrs. Robbins gave her different sums amounting altogether to $2.525 Pressed for interest on the investment, Miss Caspari, it is charged, took the money she obtained from Miss Gemmill, and during the months of May she gave Mrs. Robbins $900.

she gave Mrs. Robbins $900.

Dr. Caspari, Miss Caspari's brother, came to Washington from Baltimore, and had a long talk with Inspector Boardman. Dr. Caspari believes that his sister is not mentally responsible, and that she should be in an asylum. He adds that her actions have never been of such a nature that the authorities have seen fit to adjudge her insane.

During the five years that she was confined in the Maryland penitentiary he made repeated efforts to get some statement from her, but failed. She would tell him nothing about her unusual financial operations.

As the thoughts of her experiences with Miss Caspari came pressing back upon her, Miss Gemmill sank back in her seat with a little intaking of the breath that told more eloquently than words of the terrible disappointment of losing the savings of years in a moment, and without the slightest premonition of ill.

"I refused her positively three times before I let her have the money," she murmured wearlly, "and I did not suppose after the first time that she would return and broach the subject again.

Mrs. James told her she only had enough money to pay the rent, and refused to give her the $25. Mrs. James told the police she believed Miss Caspari must have held her with a hypnotic influence, as she knew that she was doing something foolish in letting her have the money.

"It was a long time after that first."

"Before the court she confessed to having obtained more than $70,000, yet she would not tell what had become of it. She toki me it was all invested, but she would not say where."

Dr. Caspari said he would be in Washington tomorrow, when his sister is given a preliminary hearing in the Police Court. He said that whatever action was necessary to have her examined as to her sanity would probably be taken within the next few days.

Know Little About Her.

The women residents of the Women's Christian Home, at 1719 Thirteenth street northwest, know very little of Miss Caspari's affairs or her operations. Miss Caspari went to the home upon her arrival in this city and made arrangements to live there. All of the women stated today that she seemed to be cultured and refined and evidently of good family.

She had a marked personality and was always interesting and entertaining. Miss Catherine Bent, who is at present superintendent of the home, and several of the women who have been therefor some years, all said that Miss Caspari to the own yould should be in the work.

"When she met me she used to tell am all about the Baltimore penitentiary, and at other times she would display an unbellevable familiaries. I did not suspect anymath and not spoken of her past life, and had never talked over any business proposition with them.

It was generally understood in Washington that she was traveling for some publishing firm handling an enclyclopedia. They were greatly shocked, some time after Miss Caspari left, to learn that she had been at one time a prisoner in Baltinore.

these concerns, so far as afterward could be proved, had ever existed.

The first, Miss Caspari told the friends whom she induced to part with their money, issued leaflets for Christmas and Easter services in the churches, and always paid from 8 to 10 per cent interest. It could always tell in advance how much interest it would pay because it soid its leaflets through contracts. The Boston company sold kindergarten supplies in the West, and paid 25 per cent annually on its stock. School teachers by the dozens, fellow church members and personal friends of Miss Caspari gave up their money upon her representations, as if under some hypnotic influence. She gave them roughly typewritten certificates of ownership of stock in return. When the victims expressed surprise at that she said:

Miss Caspari was brought to headquarters from the house of detention this morning, and photographed, and measured. She appeared calm during the hour that she was being measured by the Bertillon system, and her finger prints taken.

Questioned by a Times reporter, she positively refused to make any statement.

"I do not think the newspayers have any business printing anything about this. The truth is not out yet, and it may never come out. If it does, that is time enough to print the story. I have absolutely nothing to say."

To the police she would make no statement, further than saying that she had done nothing wrong, and that there was no ground for arresting her.
